Market Commentary

Recap: The oil market traded higher on Monday after the U.S. imposed new sanctions against Iran and on Iraq's reaffirmation of its commitment to the OPEC+ group's supply agreement. The market also steadied amid the uncertainty of a potential peace deal between Ukraine and Russia. On the opening on Sunday night, the market gapped lower from $70.17 to $69.80 amid the news of an expected increase in supply from Iraq. Iraq is expected to export 185,000 bpd from Kurdistan's oilfield through the Iraq-Turkey pipeline once oil shipments resume. However, the market quickly backfilled its opening gap and traded back over the $70 level after the U.S. imposed a new round of sanctions targeting Iran's oil industry and Iraq sid it would present an updated plan to compensate for any overproduction of its OPEC+ production quotas in recent months. The market traded to a high of $70.88 by mid-morning and remained range bound during the remainder of the session. The April WTI contract settled up 30 cents at $70.70 and the April Brent contract settled up 35 cents at $74.78. The product markets ended the session in mixed territory, with the heating oil market settling up 35 points at $2.4358 and the RB market settling down 1.57 cents at $2.0110.

Technical Analysis: The crude market will remain mostly sideways as it seems to be holding support over the $70 level following a brief selloff on Sunday night. The market is seen trending sideways as the market awaits for further developments on a possible ceasefire deal between Ukraine and Russia. The market is seen finding support at $70.00, its low of $69.80, $69.75 and $69.41. Meanwhile the Iraqi oil ministry said Sunday it had reached agreement with Iraqi Kurdish officials for Iraq to receive around 185,000 b/d of crude oil from Kurdistan for exports once flows resume via the pipeline from Turkey. Reuters reported that behind the scenes recent pressure from the Trump administration appears to have pushed forward the resumption of exports.

Iraq said it will submit an updated plan to compensate for overproduction during the previous period. Iraq said it will continue its efforts to compensate the accumulated overproduction while taking into account an anticipated handover of oil for export from the Kurdistan Regional Government.
